CITY TUTOR

My passion for the tourism industry began more than 30 years ago when I travelled to Australia to visit my brother. That trip sparked something in me, I suddenly wanted to see as much of the world as I could, and from that point on, I knew travel would always be part of my life.

I started my career as a domestic travel agent in Auckland, then moved to Sydney where I spent seven years working in retail travel.

During that time, I was lucky enough to explore many parts of the world myself. After returning to New Zealand to raise my children, I eventually found my way back into the industry by starting my own travel broker business in 2012. I loved helping clients plan meaningful holidays and experiences, and building strong relationships along the way.

In 2014, I began teaching travel and tourism, which gradually became my main focus. Sharing my industry experience and supporting students has been incredibly rewarding.

Having worked across different areas, retail, corporate, and running my own business, I'm able to bring real-world insights into the classroom. I enjoy helping students build confidence and discover their own path in the industry.

I'm really looking forward to getting to know my students and being part of their journey. It's always rewarding to see their confidence grow.
